

Joshua Kaplan

Joshua Kaplan is a corporate partner in the London and New York offices of Wilson Sonsini, where his practice focuses on clients in the financial technology and financial services sectors. Joshua currently serves as a director of Satispay Europe, an electronic money institution that was founded in Italy in 2013 and provides a mobile-wallet based payment network for millions of users and merchants in Europe.

Prior to joining Wilson Sonsini, Joshua was chief operating officer and general counsel at a leading global payment solutions provider. He began his career in the legal division of the Federal Reserve Board in Washington, D.C., working closely with various divisions within the Federal Reserve, including the divisions of Monetary Affairs and Reserve Bank Operations and Payment Systems. He also worked at American and European multinational banks.

Joshua's technical advisory expertise is derived from his work within the Federal Reserve and on behalf of regulated financial institutions- he has experience in product structuring and operational roles within financial institutions, including executing the expansion of a financial technology company across five continents in a senior leadership role. His representative subject matter areas include licensing and change-in-control applications; structuring and approval of novel financial products; anti-money laundering and economic sanctions compliance; interagency information security guidelines; capital and liquidity regulation; electronic funds transfers and the digitization of check processing; interchange caps and card network operating rules; and the resolution of regulatory enforcement actions.

Prior to attending law school, Joshua worked for the International Rescue Committee in Freetown, Sierra Leone, and in Indonesia (Aceh, West Timor, and East Timor).
